PERENNIAL

The Fake News Update is brought to you in part by one thousand ants! Those little critters were pinching every penny they could get their incredibly powerful mandibles on in order to pay for this episode. One thousand ants! They're stronger than you will ever be!

Upbeat Music- Something that sounds like a ripoff of NPR's intro-very plinky and cheery

ANAHITA

And now, today's Headlines:

In a case of situational irony, popular comic strip character, Charles Brown, announced this morning that he is, in fact, allergic to peanuts. When pressed for comment, his mother replied: wah wah wah, wah wah wah wah wah, wah wah.

A Mississippi couple, after capsizing their canoe, is currently stranded in a local tributary. It's since been reported that the pair remains deadlocked as to how they should escape their situation, leading to the classic debate: row versus wade.

And now for this week's cultural climate forecast: There is a 10% chance that I did it all for the nookie. Come on, the nookie. Come on. So you can take that cookie, and stick it up your, yeah. Stick it up your, yeah. Stick it up your, yeah.

PERENNIAL

Yeah!

And now our FNU Reviews segment: Eschner Assesses

PERENNIAL

This week I'm reviewing that (quote) "family" (end quote) comedy, "Flubber" starring the late, great Flubber. Anahita, I've gotta tell ya, this movie is slimy. Now, if I were an honest man, which I am, I'd say that the concept of "Flubber" was: a stretch. The film takes place in the basement laboratory of Mrs. Doubtfire, who gets her hands on a sentient blob of Nickelodean gak. Antics ensue. Mrs. Doubtfire plays basketball, and Flubber shoots out of one man's anus, like a cannon. I give this film... a few stars.
